

Evaluation Report

May 2016

INTRODUCTION

In October 2015 the Youth Engagement Slough (YES) Leads, namely Resource Productions Limited, SWIPE and Aik Saath – Together As One, approached the National Youth Agency (NYA) to evaluate and assess the first two years of their contract, delivered on behalf of Slough Borough Council and Artswork.

The tender has been in place since 2013 and runs to March 2016 (for Chalvey and Manor Park), later in 2016 for the second and third contracts (Britwell and Colnbrook and Central/Wexham and Langley).

The purpose of this report is to offer the YES Leads feedback from providers, from young people and from commissioners, in order to enable them to assess the effectiveness and impact of their approach, determine if the model is working for the young people of Slough and the organisations involved and whether the model is sustainable into the future. Additionally to offer thoughts to Slough Borough Council Commissioners in relation to possible future tenders.

The evaluation process enabled the National Youth Agency Associate to engage with providers, young people and commissioners. This was invaluable when it came to gaining an understanding of the model, expected delivery and outcomes and I would like to extend a big thank you to all who were involved over the past two months for their time and frankness in participating fully in the delivery of this report.

SUMMARY HEADLINES

This is a good news story.

There is a thriving group of associates and partners, who work within Youth Engagement Slough. There is a flourishing membership of young people, who are culturally and racially diverse, many who have a broad range of challenges in life, who are happy with the provision they participate in. The young people are also pleased to be able to have access to further activities and programmes, and the whole programme utilises a wide range of venues and locations across Slough, that make it both varied and accessible.

The capacity building, undertaken by the YES Leads, of 'associates/partners' is welcomed, the development of a sustainable model of delivery, the volume of young people reached, and the impact on young people is to be congratulated. The numbers and variety of sessions being delivered across the Borough are all success stories for Slough and the new model of delivery has demonstrated good outcomes, access to positive activities and accreditations, clear impact and can be deemed as having achieved far above expectations.

There are some areas for learning and possible improvement and these will be outlined in the recommendations later, however these make up a very small percentage of the findings of this report.

BACKGROUND

In 2012 Slough Borough Council looked to re-shape its youth provision in the Borough, for those aged 11-19, due, mainly, to budgetary constraints and departmental changes. The model under consideration was that of outsourcing the universal youth provision to external providers. The original commissioners were not available for interview due to having moved on from Slough Borough Council, but the current Contract Manager (Infrastructure and Community Development Co-ordinator) was available and offered a good level of foundational information.

The aim of the original tender (Phase 1) was designed to ensure a broader range of activities, in particular, within universal youth provision, for young people aged 11 -19 years, up to 25 years for those with additional needs. The tender had a basic value but commissioners saw potential to add value to the tender through organisations having the ability to raise external funding, that local authorities could not raise. Through this model organisations were expected to engage with more young people, ensuring that those who were engaged were some of the more challenging young people in the Borough. Another aspect of the tender was to offer young people appropriate support and guidance, as well as positive activities, to enable them to reach their potential, as well as being able to thrive and achieve by engaging fully with the support on offer.

There were, by the end of 2013, three phases of tendering in place. The geographical areas for the tenders were that of Manor Park and Chalvey, Britwell and Colnbrook, Central/Wexham and Langley. This was the first time commissioning had happened within this area of work and the initial criteria for success identified the breadth of engagement and the outcomes Slough required. The tender documentation enabled potential bidders to demonstrate a co-production model, with numerous delivery partners who come from the local community, and could demonstrate the ability to support and develop young people. The criteria areas within the tender are outlined below;

- Partnership working
- Good management arrangements
- Value for money
- Understanding of local needs
- Engagement of young people
- Ability to deliver the targets, outcomes and effective implementation

The funding was phased, starting in Year 1 with £45,000 and decreasing to £30,000 in Years 2+3. This formula of funding was applied to each tender phase with the last phase only running for 2 years.

The aims that Slough BC wanted to achieve, specifically, were;

..... For the delivery of area-based community youth work programmes that will provide activities to engage young people's interests and include an element of the delivery that is open to all. Tenderers must also address the needs of young people at risk of negative outcomes .....

..... and provide capacity to respond to young people who are referred to the providers, making contact and follow up work to enable participation, providers are to maintain proper records to track outcomes for young people and record the interventions for specific cases. Young people who could be referred and at risk of vulnerability and negative outcomes can be categorised as those who were at risk of:

- Youth offending and anti-social behaviour,
  - Substance misuse,
  - U 18 conceptions and poor outcomes for teenage parents,
  - Poor sexual health,
  - Young people who are Not in Education, Employment or Training (NEET),
  - Reduction in school exclusions,
  - Reduction in those running away/homelessness
  - Poor mental health,
  - Entry into care

Throughout the period of tendering from Phase 1 through to Phase 3 there were integral changes to the nature of the overall tender outcomes, these were changed part way through from locality based to outcomes based. Due to YES being commissioned for all three phases these changes could be implemented organically and meant that the outcomes and methodologies of delivery could also be merged to good effect. The explanation and delivery of the contract outcomes are now much clearer and easier to understand for all deliverers.

This merger of areas and outcomes has enabled the YES Leads to take a whole Borough approach to the work and identify more thoroughly the needs of the communities and young people within them. There were challenges to begin with and SBC noted that they themselves had created some difficulties by changing the recording system, this was not enabling to providers. Subsequent discussions enabled YES to develop a model of recording that would be suitable for all parties. This collaborative approach between Slough BC and YES has also allowed for common processes that can be shared throughout Slough, thus making recording more effective.

The YES delivery has demonstrated through collaboration, good relationships and communication with commissioners that expectations are realistic and can be exceeded, delivery that is responsive to the needs of Slough young people and workable by the wide range of providers who deliver the programme.

The impact that can be evidenced has been far above the expectations of the council, an extremely inclusive programme that supports the work of Early Help Slough and has the ability to identify some of the most vulnerable young people in the Borough. The community development aspects of the tender have also exceeded expectations. This has paid off in terms of numbers and quality of providers and developing that base for the future.

PROVIDERS AND ASSOCIATES FEEDBACK

The wholesale validation of the model was overwhelming from providers, they were, in the main, happy with the engagement of the Leads; from consultation, identification of key strengths of each organisation and young people's and community needs, negotiation around the type of and the nature of the activities, the frequency and duration of activities, the venues and processes to receive feedback.

The model enables a larger number of smaller voluntary and community groups to have a bigger voice in the development of the work with young people across Slough. The YES model provides access to identification of need, an involvement in the development of an overall programme that the majority of providers are involved in, developing the capacity and the ability to impact upon the lives of young people.

The overall programme throughout the period has been varied, delivered by many providers who are clear about the purpose and nature of their involvement, who feel supported in all aspects, in the main and in particular in reporting and monitoring. And to note, these are experienced providers, who are happy to work collaboratively with each other to make the experience better for the young people of Slough but this has taken work and commitment from Leads and providers to generate an environment for this collaboration to work effectively.

The work the YES Leads undertake with associates around reporting has been discussed at Associates meetings and feedback shows that the Leads are easy to engage with, workshops delivered by YES, Slough Council for Voluntary Services and others are excellent and make sure the providers get the procedures right. An acknowledgement that there were some teething problems at the beginning of the collaboration, but that through perseverance and good communication these have been ironed out and have enabled smaller youth and community groups to raise the bar in terms of quality. Sessions observed written programmes and session plans are in evidence, a responsive evaluation process which in turn has improved the quality of the delivery has also been demonstrated. Providers also noted that they have more understanding of each other and what each group can and does offer and this supports both them and the young people.

There is great store put in the promotional material developed by YES, both the website, Twitter, Facebook and leaflets are felt to all be effective, but interestingly all providers and young people alike identified that word of mouth was the most effective form of promotion.

Meeting other agencies and partners has also been invaluable, both to have the opportunity to discuss concerns and referrals and look at potential solutions and/or identify other opportunities that young people can take part in. It was noted by some providers that the Associates Meetings could be varied in terms of time, this was mainly due to most volunteers having daytime work commitments, or an alternative suggestion was that of alternating the times and days of meetings, which would offer a good compromise.

Providers were able to articulate the impact of the work on young people and they could see outcomes the young people had achieved, such as;

- learning the value of working together as a team;
- encouragement of individuals to achieve and for them to act as volunteers or support others;
- activities acting as diversionary and positive activities for those young people who are at risk of poor outcomes;
- Gaining accreditations, Arts Award/v-inspired etc. for young people who might not normally achieve awards/certificates

The overall programmes are balanced and staff identified the trust and rapport they have with young people as a strength of their involvement. The positive change sheets enable providers to write down their work and see it recognised in publicity and case studies produced by YES Leads for commissioners. Some providers were enabling the young people they worked with to be able to give something back to the community, whether that be by delivering Open Days – Fun Days, raising money for others, performing for others. Some providers are not totally comfortable with working with some of the very challenging young people who are referred or sign-posted to activities, some are more than comfortable, but providers are happy to accommodate young people if they can. From observations it was noted that some groups might benefit from some more support/key workers working alongside them, as was demonstrated at Chalvey and Britwell, where the Gangs worker was in attendance to support both staff and young people. And where this type of support is offered it enabled the provider to work with a broader cohort of young people. Where the YES Leads had matched experienced Associates to existing community groups like the Britwell Theatre, this was also singled out as a positive support to groups.

VENUES

The ambition of Slough BC to deliver in a broader range of venues appears to have been achieved. Some venues are bespoke, such as Britwell Youth and Community Project and the Orchard but others such as Chalvey Community Centre, Britwell Community Centre (although not exclusively) present their own challenges and some are not totally appropriate for the numbers of young people or the activities on offer, but this is very much in the minority and the sessions are delivered well and attract good numbers of young people. The YES Shop in the town centre is an excellent addition to the provision for young people in Slough. The shop is used by other groups as well as YES and Slough BC have also accessed it to meet or to deliver to young people, adding to the finding that YES is a known brand in the Borough.

ENGAGEMENT

Engagement is the key to the success of the programme, with associates, young people, parents/carers and the community.

The quarterly forum is useful to providers, the collaborative approach offered to providers enables young people to be signposted to new and different activities and also to get involved in Slough-wide activities. Other service areas, such as YOS, Early Help and Social Care are aware of the programme and value the work. And delivery of one to one support helps develop young people further. The referral process was supported by providers as they could work with referrers and young people to identify targets and were able to demonstrate the impact the work had had on young people. There was a real feeling that providers understood that young people were on a journey through childhood to adulthood and they could impact that by making sure that young people were able to be supported through this period.

Parental/carer engagement is mainly related to more functional aspects, engaging with them when they are dropping off and picking up their young people, or taxied into provision or if there are changes of time or cancellations. This works well. More fundamental engagement with parents/carers and possibly the most important engagement between parents/carers and providers is if a young person has a problem that parents/carers might be unaware of, if appropriate, providers will share this and discuss solutions and possible support as necessary. Some groups regularly ask parents/carers for feedback and they are asked what they want improved in terms of times and providers feed this into the development of the programmes for the future.

The engagement of the community is also fairly robust and providers have collected positive feedback from a range of community members and partners. The longevity of membership, the progression of many of the young people is testament to their involvement in the YES programmes. This could become an issue if the regular young people exclude other young people from attending the sessions. In the sessions I observed and the young people I spoke to this appears not to be an issue, the young people appear welcoming to others and supportive of others, but this is an issue that needs to be kept on the radar.

One question that was asked of providers and young people was what would happen if YES were not there? - the feedback was around how much harder this would make things for all providers, they had a concern that the referrals would not come in as well and there would be no proper feedback or joined up working to support the young people, another concern was that there would be a possible reduction in the numbers of young people attending. YES is a trusted brand, this is very positive feedback. And all asked for it to be noted that there is access to a wide range of support for the young people through the YES model, and if that were not there would the communication continue?

Another major concern for all providers was that if YES were not there what would happen to the young people, where would they go and a recognition that they may be at greater risk of poor outcomes.

One minor concern that came out was that some of the young people were starting to rely on the additional support they get from some of the activities and activity providers and this might need discussion as young people need to be able to progress/ move on. This is an issue for YES to look at and exit strategies/future proofing of the programmes might need attention.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S FEEDBACK

Only a small sample of young people completed the online survey but all of those who did participate in this and those who were spoken to through the course of the visits/observations were happy with everything. Programmes and activities, number of days of the week delivery happened on, staff and the support they receive from them. The venues were all appreciated by the young people and their continued attendance demonstrated this. If anything, all of the young people wanted activities to be on at least twice a week and more not less activity, but they understood the constraints of funding and recognised the commitment of staff to deliver what they do. The Borough-wide activities were valued and having the ability to participate in them was also valued. The staff were appreciated, they were described as "awesome", "epic", and one respondent noted that "everyone gives 100% to help and support young people". 100% of respondents would recommend the activities to others and many had recommended programmes to others already.

Some specific comments from young people;

"Thank you for everything you do for Slough youth"

"Obtaining funding to keep the projects running is important as funding is always an ongoing problem"

"More instruments"

"Liked trips out"

"Liked working together with other people"

"Making new friends"

"Ability to play properly (Girls only sports session)"

"More confidence in meeting new people"

On the whole the young people spoken to were engaging and engaged. Creativity in delivery was essential and such initiatives as The Beehive group for younger siblings, at Chalvey was essential for these young people but also for the attendance of the older young people. Although this was out of the initial remit of the Slough BC contacts it was needed and was effective to the delivery in that area.

The comments from this session were positive, seeing young people and children working together for the benefit of everyone, who mixed well and enjoyed the sessions, despite some cultural challenges and behavioural challenges the session was lively.

Overall the feedback from young people was positive. Understanding the local needs and engaging with young people was another key criteria that had been met by the YES and associates' delivery.

The delivery where possible and where applicable of sessions on 7 days a week can be achieved but can also be problematic. For some of the programmes being delivered, weekend work is part and parcel of the weekday sessions, i.e. football training in the week and games at the weekend, for others there was not always a take up from young people. The young people surveyed or spoken to were happy with the sessions, all wanted more, but they described this as more evening sessions, not necessarily more weekend sessions. Regular weekend commitments can mean that the young people are not able to participate in the borough-wide activities such as YEstival but it is clear that the YES Leads alongside providers and associates meet regularly enough to make sure that the programme is responsive to the needs of the young people attending. Regular feedback from the young people is also factored into any changes to the programme, so in the main changes demonstrate collaboration with both providers and young people.

IMPACT

There has been an encouraging change and impact upon the lives of young people who participated and the impact upon the community can be demonstrated also and were reported within this process.

The attendance at a number of sessions of PCSOs and their welcome by young people was positive, also, this made relationships in some of the areas much better and young people were less inclined to be totally anti-police and vice versa from a PCSO perspective. One PCSO spoken to knew almost all of the young people who attended the sessions and could claim a better relationship with them than if they did not attend.

Young people's feedback about the impact on themselves, and what the programmes do for them was clear and concise:

- Gives me more confidence
- Very much fun
- We get to eat
- Learn something new
- Getting out of the house
- Socialising
- Nice environment
- Giving back to the community
- More confident
- More healthy
- Meeting new people
- More sociable
- Better understanding of how to talk to people, teachers, police, peers, parents/carers

ACHIEVEMENTS

Within this contract it can be demonstrated that it is both young people and providers who are able to achieve.

The emphasis within the contract on accreditation, gaining new learning that could lead to accredited outcomes has also been very successful. YES over achieve in this area and with the Arts Awards, V-Inspired Volunteering Awards being directly delivered by associates and Leads and links into the Duke of Edinburgh's Award Scheme, VSO Awards, Martial Arts Gratings for Kick boxing, Chinese Martial Arts Awards, National Citizen's Service, ASDAN, these are positive contributions to the overall programme and offer progression as well as the opportunity for young people to engage with even more young people and volunteer in even more settings. Accreditations can be key in enabling some of the most challenging and challenged young people to be able to achieve some kind of certification which can not only increase confidence and self-esteem but for some this maybe the only form of accreditation they receive. There is always a potential for other forms of or different schemes of accreditation for young people to be explored. These are positive developments for many of the providers and is a welcome addition to the programme.

The V-Inspired Award Scheme is primarily associated with the volunteering aspects of the programme. This is an accredited scheme that is nationally recognised, enabling young people to become volunteers within their communities. YES offers on-going support and organises appropriate volunteering opportunities across Berkshire, Buckinghamshire and West London for young people to participate in. The Tuesday Aik Saath Volunteers session enabled many young people to become involved and the session observed saw over 60 young people coming in, to be trained, supported and choose their volunteering opportunities. The enthusiasm and liveliness in this session was great and the opportunities captured and used this energy. Young people have a broad range of settings within which they can volunteer and this has been recognised by others in Slough and more broadly;

"Artistic experience helps young people play a full part in society, giving them skills and experience, and for many young people achieving a certificate builds their confidence. I welcome the practical youth work which has given a group of young people this chance."

Fiona Mactaggart MP

"Artswork is delighted that its investment in Slough Youth Services has led to such a significant achievement for these young people. Arts Award take up has been fantastic and we want to congratulate the young people for their hard work on this project"

Dr Ruth Taylor

(Artswork's Strategic Manager for Berkshire, Oxfordshire, Buckinghamshire and Milton Keynes)

I truly feel honoured to have had the opportunity to award the arts award bronze to this group of young people. I can see the value in the award not just for them but also the community around them and the fact that it has brought many walks of the local community together as one.

Jordon Maynard-Daley

Arts Award

From the providers' point of view their work has been recognised in a number of national, regional and local settings, some demonstrated above. Additionally, Artwork has been acclaimed, YES/Arts work has received external funding that once again recognises the work being done, and demonstrating confidence in the delivery of activities and programmes. Funders include O2 Think Big grant, Heathrow Community Fund, BAA, The Challenge, Sport England and many others. Aik Saath has worked on a national award, the Best Partnership award with Slough Museum at the Slough Council for Voluntary Services Awards, for an oral history project called Mygration involving Aik Saath young volunteers recording older Slough residents' 'stories' of migrating to Slough and their lives here (mygration.org.uk), and the V-Unite Award.

YES/ SWIPE's relationship with Sport England and Eton College, has enabled the development of the Riverside Centre. This new provision, delivering water based/canoeing activities is a new initiative for YES Leads and the activities on offer are being delivered for the YES programme, for schools and for and with other voluntary sector providers, including uniformed organisations such as, Cadets, Scouts and Guides. The Jubilee River site is local to central Slough and the collaboration has added value and enabled significant funding to be acquired to bring this development to fruition.

From providers again there was a feeling that the relationship between Slough BC and voluntary organisations in the area was clearer and that working with the local authority was a lot better. And overall this improved the work and enabled them to be more creative with what they are able to deliver and support they are offered for any changes.

The numbers of young people reached has far outstripped expectations, over 2600 individual young people regularly participate across the year and attendances, including repeat attendances has reached almost 20,000 a year. This is challenging to continue but the bench mark has been set and there is confidence from Slough BC, providers and young people who all feel this can continue.

The case studies that YES create for each reporting period demonstrate a true and real impact on the lives of young people, from them becoming volunteers, behavioural changes, diverted them away from crime and anti-social behaviour, better attendance and achievement in school, enabling young people to have a say, can all be attributed to their involvement in the programme. It is clear that this cannot be done overnight, one of the case studies identified this as a lesson learnt, taking time and effort to help young people develop and change was rewarding but was hard work. Little steps taken to achieving goals and setting achievable goals was key to providers feeling that they had achieved success with their young people. The impact can be deemed positive in all quarters and progression has been positive and constructive, regarded well and judged effective.

CONCLUSION

Overall the provision is viewed by all as positive and a fresh new development for young people. There are some areas where there was a need to tidy up/tighten up but these were in the minority.

Against the initial criteria of the tender documentation of;

- Partnership working
- Good management arrangements
- Value for money
- Understanding of local needs
- Engagement of young people
- Ability to deliver the targets, outcomes and effective implementation

All can be viewed as successful outcomes for the commissioners. The evidence of good capacity building within the voluntary sector in Slough is a really good story for YES. The ability to lever in additional funding to assist with the programmes and broaden the delivery is not only an excellent value for money outcome but assists all deliverers and young people with the sustainability of these programmes, as can be seen at the Riverside Centre development.

The volume of young people engaged is outstanding and both numbers in total and the numbers of regular attenders and the individual outcomes for some of the most challenging young people is exceptional within the funding basket offered by SBC.

However, this is not to say that there were not some real challenges; poor behaviour, staff struggling to maintain calm, there were some opportunities for 'dealing' happening at a couple of sessions but staff were in the main aware and had the opportunity to challenge and change this behaviour, without these sessions it's suspected dealing might have become more prevalent in the areas.

There are some agenda suggestions for future meetings and one suggestion is that the meetings could generate an improved mobile-friendly newsletter that supports the discussions and concentrates on areas of mutual concern for groups.

The proof of success for the YES Leads was articulated by a number of people; that they are on top of many of the issues that are around Slough; they know about the needs of the community, and know many of the issues young people present. In relation to the good management of the contract it appears that YES Leads are on top of this also. A knowledge of many of the challenges and the issues before they have been identified by commissioners and having started to identify potential solutions, being solution focused, has made the engagement between the commissioners and Leads more mutually beneficial, which in turn makes the overall delivery to young people more beneficial.

The quality has improved, there are clear examples of where YES and associates have been able to add value to the contract and the whole programme has demonstrable confidence of the community. There is confidence about the YES Leads' ability to lead the contract and deliver on it.

There was a concern around the need to future proof the work and develop an exit strategy – a question that was posed was, was the model too vested in the current individuals and what happens/what would happen if they left? This is always a concern for people who make good and lasting relationships with people, but does need consideration through the next phase of tendering and commissioning.

As noted previously the awareness of the YES programme across the Borough was resoundingly encouraging. Providers were confident in the YES Leads and were enabled to work in both a group work and one to one setting with young people, and offered the tools by which to deliver on this by the organisation. The numbers of young people seen engaging with the programmes was varied but mostly appropriate for the venue, staffing and type of activity being delivered. The quality of the programme's activities was improving continually, with support of the organisation as a whole and internal relationships within the Associates network were good.

The fluidity of programme development and the merger of the three phases enabled this to happen in a more natural and holistic manner, this has been beneficial to all parties.

BUT WHAT FOR THE FUTURE?

The YES Leads can feel proud of their contribution to the lives of young people across Slough.

As this report began; this is a good news story. There is a thriving and committed group of associates and partners, there is a vibrant and flourishing membership of young people, who are culturally and racially diverse, who are happy with the provision they participate in and want more of it. So looking forward more of the same, there are some areas that can be tightened and tidied up, some relationships could bear a little more work and some providers could do with some more support, both from YES Leads and Slough Borough Council, but this is a positive report to bring to you. Below are some recommendations that might assist the process.

RECOMMENDATIONS

- 1 Email 'flyer' is often not compatible totally with volunteers IT and this causes issues – so think of changing style and method of communication with all providers
- 2 Update from monthly providers/associates' meetings – which could include hot topics i.e behaviour, volunteers and where providers can get them from
- 3 Associates' meetings - times and days to be varied
- 4 Some providers could/need to be offered support from key workers/Slough BC sessional staff /YES support staff so that they could support those young people with additional needs/or have challenging behaviour and enable them to offer more.
- 5 Venue audit and potential changes as necessary
- 6 Young people's reliance on the programmes if YES were not there – what happens to the providers and the young people – is there an exit strategy?
- 7 Future proofing the organisation as a whole
- 8 Internet access in some buildings used for delivery
